SHORT BIO · 50 WORDS

Adrian W. Mercer is a British novelist and essayist whose work explores memory, identity, history, and the quiet complexities of everyday life. He is the author of The Architecture of Silence (2012), Maps of a Vanishing City (2016), and The Weight of Ordinary Things (2020).

LONG BIO · 180 WORDS

Adrian William Mercer was born on September 14, 1978, in the north of England. His father repaired clocks; his mother ran the lending desk at the local library. He studied history and architectural conservation and spent a decade surveying old buildings before turning to fiction.

His debut novel, The Architecture of Silence (2012), follows an archivist who inherits a house left untouched since 1953, and the two hundred and twelve unsent letters she finds beneath its stairs. Maps of a Vanishing City (2016) collects fourteen essays on urban change and the places we lose. The Weight of Ordinary Things (2020) turns to the objects and rituals of everyday life.

Known for reflective prose and carefully observed characters, Mercer writes at the intersection of literary fiction, cultural criticism, and philosophy. His essays on architecture, memory, and culture appear regularly in literary magazines. He is at work on a new novel.

"Small in subject and enormous in feeling."
THE NORTHGATE REVIEW

"A field guide to everything a city forgets."
THE CITY DESK

"Mercer writes about houses the way other novelists write about people."
THE LANTERN LITERARY SUPPLEMENT

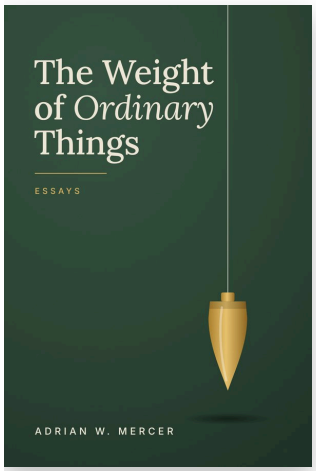

"A debut of rare patience."
MERIDIAN BOOKS WEEKLY

AUTHOR EXCERPT

"Every place holds two histories: the one preserved in records, and the one carried quietly by the people who remember."
